The Dynamic Duo Dance between the Project Manager & Business Analyst

In today's fast-paced business climate, where does business analysis end and project management begin? It can be a confusing picture. Some organizations have project managers and no business analysts; others have analysts but lack effective implementation expertise. Some organizations have analysts and managers who interact and cooperate effectively – others do not!

There is no template for the structure of this relationship that suits all organizations – nor should there be! But in acknowledging the uniqueness of individual partnerships it is apparent that success in the wider field of change management depends on business analysis and project management working together with increasing effectiveness.

This session highlights the super-heros of change that are growing today's businesses...the "Dynamic Duo" of business analysis and project management. Led by a facilitator who is certified and highly experienced in both roles, this interactive session will engage the audience on a path to find solutions that fit their unique needs.

The Essential Ingredients for Nourishing Your Team

Julia Child met Simone Beck, who was writing a French cookbook for Americans with her friend Louisette Bertholle. Beck proposed that Child work with them, to make a cookbook that could appeal to Americans. Julia would not have been our "French Chef" had she not collaborated with Simone and Louisette to transform their draft of a French cookbook into her debut cookbook, "Mastering the Art of French Cooking".

Collaboration is a key ingredient for nourishing a team. When we look at the synonyms for "nourish", we find words like feed, nurture, encourage, cultivate, foster, support, collaboration. Aren't these things you want to do for your team?

In this fun and interactive session, you will learn the "recipe" you can use to create a winning culture to boost employee morale and engagement by:

- Understanding the best ingredients to bring to the table
- Reviewing the 11 steps it takes to create an excellent team
- Developing an action plan to make real changes NOW!
